

and Marxist decolonial politics by examining the archive of joint political practices and the relations between decolonial Muslim and socialist struggles. Rexhepi treats the legacies that have shaped the contemporary world so that the two histories are (problematically) regarded as mutually exclusive.

Piro Rexhepi holds a PhD in Politics from the University of Strathclyde and is a research fellow at the Max Planck Institute for the Study of Religious and Ethnic Diversity, Göttingen, Germany. He has teaching positions at the State University of New York, City University of New York and New York University.

Propaganda in Question. Photographing the Gulag under Stalin

Lecture co-sponsored by the Kunsthistorische Gesellschaft

Although often described as invisible, the Soviet Gulags were extensively documented by the state. While these images are sanitized – almost no images of the Gulag as atrocity have survived – thousands of photographs of the camps are preserved in archives all over Russia. This talk examines a range of works, from Aleksandr Rodchenko's infamous photo-essay of the White Sea-Baltic Canal to virtually unknown photographic albums.

AFTERMATHS AND TRANSFORMATIONS: OCTOBER REVOLUTION 1917 REVISITED

The Russian Revolution of 1917, which began with the February Revolution and culminated in October with "ten days that shook the world" established the first workers' socialist state in history and is therefore the preeminent event of the 20th century. Moreover, the two other "events" of the 20th century, namely the two world wars, were connected to carnage and death with no emancipatory impulse.

When thinking of freedom and change, the October Revolution palpably echoes with two other historically momentous revolutions: the Haitian Revolution, the anti-slavery and anti-colonial insurrection of 1791-1804, and the French Revolution of 1789, the ideological, political and social upheaval in the political history of France and Europe by those who were not recognized as the new labor force or as agents of change.

One hundred years later, this interdisciplinary international project engages with the turbulent moments of the October Revolution from the perspective of the present. As we revisit the aftermaths and transformations of this historical event, we ask:

- How did the mythologies, ideologies, and realities of the October Revolution shape disparate aesthetic, cultural and activist practices?
- What kind of radically transformative subjectivities might be envisioned in moments of revolution?

17.00 Poetic performance: Spoken Word and Reflections by Njideka
Is the Night for Poets and Dreamers? Sisters of Utopia Seize the Day

The performance will consider art's potential to change the world, while asking where this "stage" for change might appear. How are the dreamers dismissed? Is poetry for the lovers? Can the lovers change the world?

Njideka Stephanie Iroh (Vienna) is a London-born Black Austrian writer, artist and activist based in Vienna. In a combination of spoken word, performances and lectures, she deals with topics such as language, power relations, decolonization, Afrofuturism and the embodiment of knowledge.

18.30 Lecture: Ilya Budraitskis (Russia)
Heritage without heirs? The anniversary of 1917, the Kremlin's historical policy, and commitment to the Event

This lecture will focus on the anniversary of the Russian revolution in the framework of contemporary Russian historical policy. The latter is based on the idea of a struggle to preserve a heritage that is under constant attack by enemies. This is an artificially created version of national history as mythological time in which people's actions are deprived of all autonomy.

Ilya Budraitskis is a historian, political writer and curator, member of the editorial board of Moscow Art Magazine, platforms Openleft and LeftEast. He is the author of Dissidents among dissidents, 2017.

15.30 Lecture: Lina Ben Mhenni (Tunisia)
The Tunisian Revolution, a success?

In December 2010, Tunisians stood against the dictatorship in their country. In less than one month, they succeeded in ousting the dictator who had oppressed them for more than two decades. They thus announced the beginning of a series of revolt movements that shook the whole Arab region. Lina Ben Mhenni asks if these movements – known as the "Arab Spring" – are still an issue.

Lina Ben Mhenni is an activist, the author of the popular blog A Tunisian Girl, a human rights defender, former teaching assistant of linguistics at Tunis University (Faculty of Human and Social Sciences), freelance translator and writer.

17.00 Lecture: The New Barbizon Collective (Israel)
[Zoya Cherkassky-Nnadi and Natalia Zourabova]

The Influence of Socialist Realism on the work of the New Barbizon Group

In this lecture, we will consider Soviet art, which for political reasons turned out to be outside Western artistic discourses. Post-Soviet artists considered it irrelevant.

Today, artists and collectives such as the New Barbizon are increasingly turning to their Soviet heritage and rethinking its influence.

Zoya Cherkassky-Nnadi (1976, Kiev, Ukraine), immigrated to Israel in 1991. She lives and works in Tel Aviv-Yafo. Her works have been shown in Israeli art museums and galleries throughout Europe and in the US.

Natalia Zourabova (1975, Moscow) graduated with an MFA from The Russian Theatre Academy in 2000, and from The University of Fine Arts, Berlin, in 2003. In 2011, together with four others, she founded The New Barbizon Group. Zourabova's paintings have been exhibited internationally.

18.30 Lecture: Jeremy M. Glick (USA)

Haitian Revolutionary Repetitions: Thought, Praxis, Performance

C.L.R. James's classic 1938 study The Black Jacobins: Toussaint L'Ouverture and the San Domingo Revolution is organized by way of a triangulated narrative structure. James triangulates the Haitian Revolution with the coeval French Revolution and the Twentieth Century Russian Revolution. My talk will examine three sites: questions of self-determination in the Russian Revolution and Pan African legacies, insights from C.L.R. James narrative structure of The Black Jacobins, and Sergei Eisenstein's engagement with the Haitian Revolution in his curriculum choices as professor at the film school in Moscow.

Jeremy Matthew Glick is Associate Professor of African Diaspora literature and modern drama at Hunter College. He is also the Hunter College Chapter Chair of the PSC-CUNY Union. Professor Glick has recently received the Nicolas Guillen Philosophical Literature Prize for his 2016 book, The Black Radical Tragic from the Caribbean Philosophical Association.
